Can WoW Glider (bot) assist in play for someone who is disabled? 04/09/08 02:23 PM
by Markee Dragon

We ask the question: Can Glider assist in play for someone who has a disability? We asked this of Paigan who is legally disabled even though he does not see himself as such. At age 75 he is the oldest hard core World of Warcraft player we have ever met.

Quit your day job & play games

Wil Wheaton PAX 07 keynote excerpt

Paigan (Game name) who is one of the oldest hard core players in World of Warcraft explains how he makes 70 gold a day in his first hour of game play. It's pretty simple and is within the normal game mechanics. ie. No exploits, bugs or bots used.

I'll take the blame for getting him into WoW. He's hard core into the game even though he does not really admit it. At 75 years old he's one of the oldest players you will meet in game.

 by Markee Dragon

We want to pay you for your talent. We have an experiment we want to try. Our web page for Glider located at <http://www.markeedragon.com/buy-sell/world-of-warcraft-bot-wow-glider/> is already one of the top pages for any WoW bots when you do searches on any of the major search engines. This page gets seen by more than 1000 people per day. We recently added a tool to this page that allows us to measure how many people that go to the page actually click to go through to one of the glider pages. We were stunned to see that only 1.19% of the people who visit the page actually went through to the Glider store or the site. That's only 119 out of every 10,000 people!

We are big fans of Glider and we want to send more people over to find out about it. We think we have written a good page to refer people over. But we think better can be done. So the idea of a contest is born! We would like to get at least 10 submissions from people who think they can write a better page. We will test all submitted versions of the new page and we will pay the author of the best page $250! But that's not all. I want as many people as possible to be rewarded for their efforts. So I will also give the top 10 versions that get a click through rate of over 1.19% a free Glider key!

So do you think you could write a better version of this page that would entice more people to click through to the Glider site? Here's the rules for this competition.

- * Email your submission to markeedragon@markeedragon.com
- * The area of the page you may alter is the main body. We will still have the site header, left menu and footer. The background will be a solid black.
- * For images either attach them to the email or give us a URL to their location.
- * You may use full HTML. Or you can write it up in a Word document. To make sure the code is not broken when it arrives to us you should attach the HTML code as a text document.
- * Stupid stuff like just a link on the page at 72 font size will not be accepted. The page should not be offensive in any way. Well it can be offensive to people who hate bots. But in general it should not offend people.
- * You may make multiple submissions. If you want to try a bunch of different versions you may do so.

We will accept submissions for the next 2 weeks. After April 15th 2008 submissions will not longer be accepted. We will start testing each page submitted to see which one works out the best. May 19th we'll look at the stats for the pages and we will see who's in first place and who has made the top 10. We'll contact all of you and start giving out the prizes.

We reserve the right to make changes to this contest at any time. The cash prize will be sent to the winner via Paypal. The winner will be identified as the person who writes the best page and gets the highest click through percentage. Each submission will be assigned a number that will appear at the bottom of the page. After you have sent in your submission we will reply with your submission number so that you may watch the page to see it appear.

Guild Wars tells gold buyers to file charge backs and reversals 03/22/08 01:36 PM

Guild Wars takes an interesting stand on real money trading and tells customers to file chargebacks with their credit card companies when they delete your gold you purchased. What the hell are they thinking?

Hackers steal MMO passwords via Websites 03/13/08 06:01 PM

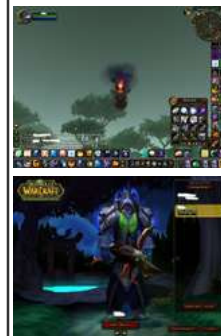

by Ace Logan

Hackers running off of Chinese based servers are finding unpatched servers and infecting them with transparent code. The small bit of javascript code then steals passwords to several online games, Lord of the Rings being the main one.

McAfee reports that they do not know how many servers are actually compromised, but note that as long as security updates have been ran for both servers, and for games, things should be fine.

We all know of course the real value of items, in game currency, and characters in these types of games. So it's no wonder that people are exploiting security holes as much as possible, as these are incredibly hard to track crimes.

The fix of course is to keep your Operating System and Games as up to date as possible. If you don't, you'll be sorry!

by Markee Dragon

It's a really big deal to know as much info about the person you are dealing with as possible. Trust Who has started providing our forums with Geo-Locational information on each post. Just look at one of the latest posts to see where in the world it was posted from.

Also: A side note that is not mentioned in the video. We are doing this for new posts only. Some of you expressed concerns that this was going to show too much information about yourself. The question comes up "What are you hiding?". But we decided to apply it to only new posts this way those of you that have something to hide can keep it hidden. But new posts will show it. 😊

by Markee Dragon

The UO:KR client came out in 2007. It was loaded with bugs and performance issues that caused a large number of players to steer clear of using it. A number of patches were released such that by mid-Feb 2008 the client was in pretty good shape and offered a bunch of useful features to players. The Syndicate® created a series of articles that were used internally in their guild to help educate our members on the new client and the options they might find useful. Those articles have been compiled into a single guide that we have made available on our website to all players. You can find a copy of the article HERE

Bernie DeKoven at DeepFun.com was asked a question I'd like to expand upon. He was asked "Are video games ever good for Kids?" His answer was both yes and no. An amazingly pretty level headed reply in my opinion.

My question is, are games good for anyone? There are some like Jack Tompson who say no, no, no. And then there are those who say "heck yes!"

But do games contribute anything to society? Has gaming helped make great leaps in technology, science, education or other social programs?

On a personal level how have video games helped or harmed you?

Will video games every be helpful to society?

Please comment and vote your opinion.

by Ace Logan

Koei Entertainment has launched Romance of the Three Kingdoms Online. For those of us who've followed the series over the years it's unfortunately a Japanese only release. There is no word of it's North American release date, but the franchise has been one of Koei Entertainment's most profitable ones in the US so it'll come eventually.

Romance of the Three Kingdoms is a historical Chinese Fantasy Story set in the time period of China's Han Dynasty about 200AD. The original games are more like resource management type games or military simulations. But based off the YouTube Videos it's a lot closer to WoW in game play. The game won't put much of a dent in Blizzard's subscription numbers at least in the US, but in Asia it could be a real competitor.
